Types of Dexter/Russell Grinds and Edges

Dexter/Russell Roll Grind... employed in heavy cook's knives, cleavers, butcher's etc. Where unusual support & bulk is required behind the cutting edge.

Dexter/Russell Panel Grind... long, even grind with a rolled edge. Perfect for slicers because of blade thinness behind the cutting edge. Standard for Dexter knives of this type.

Dexter/Russell Hollow Grind...
Long, wide, concave grind with a rolled edge.

Safety Hints

1. Select correct knife for the job.
2. Never attempt to catch a falling knife.
3. Keep your mind on your work when holding a knife.
4. Store knives in rack or slots when not in use.
5. Never put knife in water or under vegetables where it can't be seen, serious cuts can occur as a result.
6. Cut away from the body.
7. Keep knives sharp.
8. Don't "palm" vegetables or fruit & then attempt to cut.
9. Don't use knives as a can or jar opener.

Care of Knives

Select correct knife for job. Keep all knives in a rack to prevent direct contact with each other or other hard objects. Don't toss in a drawer or use to open cans, remove jar & bottle caps, or cut string, bones, metal, or paper.

Always use a cutting board or proper cutting surface when chopping, slicing, or mincing - never cut on metal, glass or porcelain. Knives of carbon steel should be washed & dried immediately after using to prevent rusting. Never permit knives to soak in water. For efficient performance, keep knives sharp; a dull knife can be dangerous!

Keeping Cutlery Sharp

Kitchen knives demand constant inspection for efficient performance. A fine cutting edge made from the best steel & finest manufacturing know-how will turn its edge if used on a hard surface.

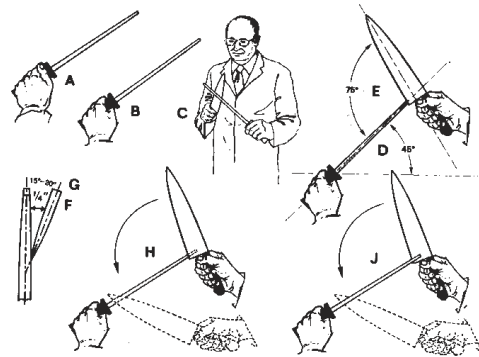

Ordinary slicing of meat will dull a good edge. However, this doesn't mean the knife requires reshaping. A few light strokes on a butcher's steel will reset the edge & restore knife's keenness. Eventually keen edge wears off & use of a steel will not restore it.

Grinding is a job best left to professional grinding services. If this service is not available, careful grinding with a quality hand/motor-driven grinding wheel may be employed. It is extremely important when grinding, not to overheat blade, as excessive heat will draw the temper, and blade will no longer hold its edge. Wet grindstones are best possible protection against overheating. A good lubricated stone can be used when steeling fails to bring the edge back. With proper instructions, a person can become quite skilled in sharpening knives!

How to use Sharpening Steel

To use a sharpening steel properly for the best results, a simple technique should be mastered:

1. Grasp sharpening steel firmly in left hand (if you're right-handed) place thumb securely behind guard as shown in drawings A or B, pick position to suit you most comfortably for safety.
2. Hold sharpening steel away from body at comfortable distance (short of full extension with elbow slightly bent) about waist height. See figure C.
3. Sharpening steel may be held at angle of 45° as in Figure D; any angle from 0° to 45° may be used according to individual preference.
4. Hold knife securely by handle in right hand as if for cutting. Place heel of blade against steel at a 75° angle as shown in figure E.
5. While keeping cutting edge of knife against steel's surface, raise back of blade about 1/4" off steel as illustrated in Figure F. The purpose of this action is to position the knife blade against the steel at an angle of 15° to 20° as shown in figure G.
6. Try to maintain angle & apply constant, moderate pressure as you draw blade smoothly across & down full length of steel in 1 continuous motion: until tip of blade completes stroke by passing off the steel near handle guard. See figure H. Go as slowly as you wish to be sure of accuracy.
7. Return knife blade to original position but w/opposite side of blade placed on underside of steel (see figure J) & repeat step 5 through 6.

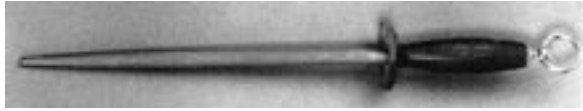

How many strokes are necessary?

The answer to this question depends on the condition of the knife you are sharpening: On an already sharp knife only a few light pressured strokes are necessary to maintain the sharp edge before use. If you do not wish to use the sharpening steel this frequently, additional strokes will be necessary to reestablish a keen cutting edge.

On a very dull knife, perhaps as many as 15 to 20 strokes on each side of the blade will be needed with a heavier pressure of blade against the steel before the edge is restored.

Even while you are perfecting your sharpening technique, your cutting chores will become easier with each use. Once you have fully mastered the technique, no other sharpening device will ever be necessary to maintain or restore the cutting edges on your cutlery.

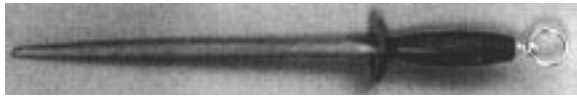

Remember sharp knives are safe knives because they require less pressure in cutting, and do not slip as easily as dull knives.
